

KOBO

PURE SOY CANDLES

We are not timid about creating fragrances that are as unique as they are exquisite.

Well before mobile phones and wireless networks, Junko and Louis, freshly married in southern Japan and adventurous, spent years traveling together to some of the most remote parts of the world. Though difficult to imagine in today's connected age they were often out of touch of their families and friends back home for years at a time. Later, after reuniting with many of their loved ones they had photos to pass around and stories to tell of their journeys. Filled with exotic detail and rare beauty the photos could never express the full range of experience. Often Junko was found describing the scent of morning in the rain forest, the desert evening or the empty streets after a lively celebration. How could the scent be expressed? Could it be captured? She came to understand fragrance as one of the key elements in bringing an environment to life, and yet often overlooked. That extra invisible but profound impression takes you deep into your memories and feelings. From this concept an interest and passion for fragrance was formed, and from that KOBO pure soy candles was born.

A SCENT HEIST

Each spring our bonding family tradition is to travel together someplace new. A place we can all explore together. Walking to discover each little corner off the beaten path. On one of those days, along a main boulevard in a small city in Portugal, the afternoon was warming, and a remarkable scent filled the air. Turning a corner, it became even more

“I crushed up some of the rich and heady. The streets were lined with beautiful blossoming olive trees. Barely able control myself with the joy of this scent. I spotted a small stone ledge and stepped up. It led to a low sturdy branch and I climbed. I could hear the voices of our sons, filled with embarrassment. “Dad, what are you doing?” “People will see you” “Is that even legal?” I didn't pay too much attention as all I could think of was my goal of getting closer. Scurrying up the trunk I grabbed a handful of the blossoms and leaves and jumped back down to the street side. Upon landing I peeked over at Junko who had a mixture of amusement and “uh, here he goes again” on her face. I crushed up some of the leaves in my palm to release the fragrant oils. Sticking my nose directly into the center was an intoxicating universe of aroma. I reached out my cupped hands to get everyone to take a sniff but of course they wouldn't. However, I will take away two victories. First, that by the end of the day both boys had a small ball of flowers and leaves they would periodically reach into their pockets to savor. Second, that we brought those bits back with us and they became the base of our wildly popular Portuguese Olive Blossom scent.
